

RBC scoping-only pilot: blocks, variants and templates without migration

The same 181 pages scoped from the saved Stardust snapshot alone. No page was migrated and no content was imported. Variant screenshots are cut from the live-site snapshot; variants that only exist on the approved reference pages show the prototype render. Every link opens the live page.

Verdict

Verdict: the scoping-only track works

From the saved snapshot alone, the pilot reproduced the full migration's block scope. It found the same 9 content blocks and 41 variants. On every page whose migrated document came from the current importer, it found the identical set of blocks: 71 of 71 live-imported pages and 5 of 5 reference pages.

Pages	181, classified from the saved Stardust snapshot (rendered HTML), with nothing imported
Master blocks	11: cards, accordion, hero, columns, table, card-highlights, toc, search, earn-calculator, header, footer
Variants	44 = 41 recognised + 3 new from the unknown review (columns tip, columns cta, cards checklist)
Default scope, before	220 variants of 14 types, 58 of them "unknown", in 11 templates
Unknowns, mapped automatically	46 to a block, 9 to page prose, 3 not recognised (client-side widgets)
Unknowns, after review	All 58: 44 existing variant, 3 new variant, 6 page prose, 5 client-side widgets
Coverage	90% of visible page text is recognised on average (lowest 63%, on the interactive tool pages). 7 sections are unassigned, all of them article share rows.

What the pilot proves, and what it doesn't

- Proven: blocks, variants, templates, unknowns and screenshots can all be scoped without importing anything. Classifying 181 pages took about 3 minutes, against hours for a full bulk import.
- Caveat: the component matcher was tuned on these same RBC pages during the migration. On a new site the result depends on the Phase 6 tuning loop (screenshot review → matcher rule), which the playbook keeps. Expect several rounds before the unknowns are closed.
- Not covered without migration: losses that only show up in imported content, such as dropped photos or missing card grids. The coverage check (text recognised, unassigned sections) is the stand-in.

Blocks

11 master blocks: 9 content blocks plus the header and footer, with 44 variants. Counts are instances recognised on the 181 snapshot pages.

What is a Credit Card?

An Introductory Guide

Explore an introduction to credit cards, how they work, and the different types available so you can understand the benefits and how to manage your credit card.

Key Takeaways

A credit card is a type of payment card that lets you borrow money up to a set limit to pay for goods and services.

Unlike a debit card, you repay the balance later instead of funds being debited from your account right away.

To sum it up:

Cash back is earned by applying your card's cash back rate to eligible purchases, allowing you to receive a percentage of what you spend.

Earning travel rewards points with an RBC Avion travel credit card

Avion Rewards is RBC's flexible travel rewards program, giving you the ability to earn points on every purchase. While all Avion cards allow you to collect points, some earn at a higher rate on everyday categories such as groceries, dining, or travel. This means you can choose the card that best matches your spending habits and build points more quickly.

You can use your Avion points to book any flight, anytime, on over 500 airlines with no blackout dates or seat restrictions, even during peak seasons. Points can also be redeemed for hotels, vacation packages, car rentals, and other travel expenses

TLDR

- Travel credit cards allow cardholders to earn reward points on eligible travel and purchases, which may be redeemed in accordance with the applicable rewards programs for flights, vacation packages and travel-related benefits.
- You can maximize credit card points for travel by using cards that offer bonus points on high-spend categories like travel, groceries, or dining.
- Many travel credit cards include high-value perks, such as airport lounge access, travel medical insurance and free checked bags, that help offset annual fees.
- When considering what the best credit card for travel points is, take your lifestyle into account. If you prefer travel perks, business flexibility or a low fee card, for example, that should play a role in your decision.

Choosing the best credit card for travel points depends on your spending habits, where you want to go, how you want to get there, and where you want to stay. This guide explains how travel rewards work, from accumulating points for flights and unlocking airport lounge access to earning extra points on everyday purchases, such as groceries, and obtaining travel insurance. Whether you're a frequent flyer or an occasional traveller, here's what you need to know before deciding which travel credit card is right for you.

What is a travel credit card?

A travel credit card rewards you for spending by giving you points for everyday purchases. These points, which can be used to pay for travel-related expenses such as hotels, flights and rental cars, are earned at different rates depending on the card and spending category of your purchases. Some cards allow you to redeem points through their own travel portal, while others focus on specific airlines or hotel partners.

How are travel credit cards different from cash back credit cards?

Travel cards differ from cash back credit cards in a few ways. A cash back card gives you back a percentage of the money you spend on purchases as a statement credit. A travel card gives you points you can use toward your next getaway and usually comes with perks that cash back cards don't offer. You might gain access to airport lounges, for instance, or emergency medical insurance for travel outside Canada.

How do travel credit cards and rewards points work?

Understanding credit cards with travel benefits is the first step toward turning your daily coffee run into your next vacation. Here's a breakdown.

What are rewards points?

Think of rewards points as a strategic way to get more value out of everyday spending. Every purchase, from gas to groceries and dining out, serves as a small contribution that, over time, can build to a significant reserve. Points can typically be redeemed for flights, hotels, gift cards, or a statement credit, but options may vary by card. Check your specific travel rewards card's terms for details. The value of your points depends on the program and what you choose to spend them on.

How to earn travel rewards points

How quickly you accumulate points depends on what you're buying. Most cards give you one point per dollar spent, as a baseline, but travel cards often award more points when you spend on flights, hotels or car rentals. RBC's Avion Visa Infinite, for instance, adds a 25% bonus on these travel-related categories.

How to redeem travel rewards points

Wondering how to use your credit card points for travel? Once you've saved enough points, you get to decide. Depending on your specific travel rewards card, you may redeem points for flights, hotel stays or vacation packages through your card's travel portal. However, redemption options and point values can vary between card products. There's also the option to move those points into a partner program, which can sometimes stretch your rewards further on certain flights or hotels.

The Avion Rewards system is built for flexibility, letting you book through the travel portal, redeem points for travel booked with any provider or transfer them to various loyalty programs, including The British Airways Club and WestJet Rewards.

The basics of travel rewards points value

Your points are worth more in some places than others, but you'll generally get the highest redemption value for booking flights or hotels. If you're not sure how far your points at RBC will go, the RBC Credit Card Rewards Calculator is a good place to check your options before you book.

How to maximize credit card points for travel

Consistency is a key factor to earn travel award points efficiently, while managing your card responsibly. If you pay your balance in full monthly to limit charges, consider consolidating your existing routine expenses onto your travel card. This may help you earn points without increasing your overall expenditure. It's also worth hunting for cards that offer a high welcome bonus, so they may jumpstart your progress toward a specific trip you have planned.

Your point balance may grow faster if your card is tailored to the specific things you purchase most often. For instance, if you prefer cooking meals at home, you might want to look for a card that offers more points on groceries. If you drive a lot, you might want to consider a card that provides more points on gas. A card that offers bonus points (also called multipliers) in your top spending categories will give you a better return on your purchases.

On the redemption side, if you travel outside peak season, you may need fewer points (depending on whether your loyalty program uses dynamic pricing). See this guide on how to get the most out of your Avion points, whether you're travelling within Canada or abroad.

What are the different types of travel credit cards?

The travel card market has grown to cover nearly every type of traveller, from those who fly once a year to those who seem to live at the airport. The categories below should help you figure out where you fit on that spectrum.

Category	Best For	Key benefits	Drawbacks	RBC example
Premium	Travellers who want flexibility to earn rewards across multiple programs	Transfer points or use the bank's booking portal; use points for things like car rentals, gift cards and statement credits	Annual fee; potential blackout periods; lower perks	RBC Avion Visa Infinite
Co-branded	Travellers who have an affinity to a specific airline or hotel chain	Earn points directly with specific airline or hotel loyalty programs; travel perks like free checked bags and annual companion voucher	Some limit points to one brand or specific partner brands	WestJet RBC Mastercard or Bank of America Visa Infinite
Luxury	Frequent travellers who want perks	Airport lounge access; annual travel credits; higher earn rates; better insurance coverage	Higher annual fees	RBC's Avion Visa Infinite Privilege

What are the benefits of travel credit cards?

Travel cards offer more than just points. Depending on the card, you might get access to perks that can make your trip smoother, cheaper and more enjoyable, such as:

- Airport lounge access: Visit for your flight in a quieter space with free food, drinks and Wi-Fi. Check card details to see how many passes you'll get each year.
- Travel medical insurance: Emergency medical coverage outside Canada is expensive to buy separately, so this perk may add value for some international travellers.
- Travel credits: Some premium cards offer annual credits that automatically apply to travel purchases, helping to offset their annual fee.
- Free checked baggage: Some co-branded airline cards waive baggage fees for you (and your companions).
- Status upgrades: Some cards offer a way to reach higher reward levels that unlock premium benefits such as priority services, lounge access or increased earn rates on your purchases.
- Concierge services: Luxury cards often include a concierge line that can help with restaurant reservations, event tickets or travel arrangements.

How to choose the best travel credit card for you

The right card for you depends on how you travel and what you value most. Here are a few things to consider:

- Frequency of travel: The more often you fly, the more value you get from a premium or luxury card. Occasional travellers may want to stick with something simpler.
- Airline or hotel loyalty: Travellers who prefer one airline or hotel brand may benefit from a co-branded card, which earns points directly in that loyalty program.
- Spending habits: Bonus points are only useful if they line up with how you spend. Someone who eats out four nights a week may get more value from a dining multiplier than a bonus for groceries.
- Earning potential: Two cards can look similar but earn points at different rates. Make sure the cards' multipliers align with your goals before you make your decision. For example, while certain cards accelerate point accumulation, the redemption value of those points may be low.
- Income requirements: Some cards require a minimum household income for applicants to qualify. Check before you apply.
- Perks that matter to you: Access to airport lounges is wasted if you never use it. Try to focus on benefits that align with how you like to travel.
- Insurance needs: Many travel cards include emergency medical coverage, trip cancellation protection or both. If you need more details on what's typically covered, read this guide on how to find the best credit card for travel insurance.
- Preferred redemption style: Some travel cards let you transfer your points to airline partners, while others only allow bookings through a specific portal. Look for the approach that fits how you like to plan your adventures.

Is a travel credit card worth it for you?

Using credit cards with travel perks can make sense if you take at least one or two trips a year and want your everyday spending to work harder for you. The points can add up faster than people often expect, and the perks can make your travels much more enjoyable. Remember to read the fine print to help yourself choose the option that best suits your lifestyle.

Travel credit card FAQs

Do travel rewards points expire?

Expiry rules vary, but Airion Rewards points are valid as long as your RBC card is active and in good standing. If your credit card account is closed (either by you or RBC), you have 12 months to spend your points before they are considered forfeited. WestJet points are also valid as long as your WestJet Rewards account remains active, meaning you earned, redeemed, transferred or converted WestJet points within the preceding 24-month period. It is as easy as making at least one purchase with your WestJet co-brand card within 24 months. See the applicable terms for more details.

Can I redeem points for cash instead?

Many cards let you redeem points for gift cards or to pay down your credit card balance, but you will usually get better value when you use them for travel. Airion points can be used to pay bills, donate to charity and more. Find a list of ways you can use your Airion points here.

How do I use travel credit card insurance?

Your travel medical coverage activates automatically when you pay for travel with your card, but you'll have to contact the insurer directly if you need to make a claim.

How many travel credit cards should I have?

One card is enough for most people, but some travellers carry two or three to maximize earnings across different spending categories.

How Do Cash Back Credit Cards Work? A Complete Guide

Introduction:

Cash back credit cards allow you to earn money back on everyday purchases. This guide explains how cash back works, highlights key features to compare and helps you choose a card that fits your spending habits so you can get the most value from your cash back.

This guide is designed to help you understand, compare and maximize cash back credit cards.

Key Takeaways:

- Cash back credit cards reward you with a percentage of eligible purchases. RBC's cash back cards offer earning rates typically fall between 0.5% and 3%, based on a base rate and/or bonus categories, though rates may be higher with promotional offers.
- Choosing the right card depends on your spending habits. Flat-rate for simplicity or tiered for focused category spending.
- Cash back cards can maximize reward retention when you pay your balance in full monthly, as unpaid balances may incur interest that arguably diminishes the value of earned cash back. One way to optimize earnings is to ensure cash back earnings exceed annual fees and review terms for limits, activation requirements, and redemption thresholds.
- Smart management turns everyday purchases into consistent returns. To maximize your cash back, track bonus categories, and monitor spending limits.

What is a cash back credit card?

- A cash back credit card is a type of credit card that returns a percentage of eligible purchases as cash back.
- Some cash back credit cards offer more cash back on certain purchases, while others offer a flat rate across every purchase type.
- If your account is active and in good standing, you can earn cash back on qualifying purchases, making these cards a popular option for people who want straightforward cash back on everyday spending.
- In short, cash back cards return a percentage of what you spend.

How is cash back earned?

Cash back is earned when you make eligible purchases with your cash back credit card.

Each purchase earns cash back based on the card's cash back rate, which is the percentage of the purchase amount that is returned to you as a reward.

For example, an $80 purchase with a 2% earn rate would return $1.60 in cash back.

$$$80 \times 0.02 = $1.60$$

RBC cash back credit cards offer rates that typically range from up to 0.5% to 3%, depending on the card and the type of purchase, though some cards occasionally feature promotional offers with even higher returns for a limited time.

"Eligible purchases" generally include everyday spending such as groceries, gas, dining, or online shopping, while certain transactions like cash advances, balance transfers, or fees usually do not earn cash back.

Many cash back cards use a combination of a base rate and bonus categories.

- Base Rate: The standard cash back rate that applies to most purchases. This rate is typically 1%, though it can range from 0.5% to 2% depending on the card's fee structure.

- Bonus Categories: Specific types of spending such as groceries, gas, dining, or travel that earn a higher cash back rate (between 1.5-3% depending on the issuer).

Here is a sample of how cash back can be earned on a card with a 1% base rate and 3% bonus rate:

Purchase Type	Cash Back Rate	Example Purchase	Cash Back Earned
Everyday purchases	1% base rate	$100	$1.00
Grocery Stores/Dining	3% bonus rate	$100	$3.00

To better understand how to calculate cash back on credit cards at RBC, you can use our Cash Back Calculator to estimate potential cash back based on how you use your card.

To sum it up:

Cash back is earned by applying your card's cash back rate to eligible purchases, allowing you to receive a percentage of what you spend.

How is cash back posted and redeemed?

After you make eligible purchases, RBC automatically tracks the cash back you earn. Most cards calculate cash back at the end of each billing cycle and post the earned amount to your monthly statement or online account portal. You can easily check your RBC cash back balance on your monthly statement, or check it anytime through RBC Online Banking.

Some credit cards automatically apply cash back as a statement credit, reducing your outstanding balance. Others allow you to choose when and how to redeem your cash back once they become available, such as applying them as a statement credit or redeeming them as a direct deposit into a linked bank account.

How to redeem RBC cash back:

- Request a credit to your credit card account once your cash back balance hits $25 or more and RBC will issue the credit within 5 business days.

OR:

- Wait for it to be automatically credited to your account in January each year (if your cash back balance exceeds $25).

In short, here's how cash back is earned, posted and redeemed:

- Make eligible purchases with your cash back credit card.
- Earn cash back on each purchase based on your card's cash back rate.
- Check your cash back balance on your monthly statement or through RBC Online Banking.
- Cash out your cash back any time you reach $25.

OR:

Let your balance add up all year for cash back redeemed automatically on your account in January.

Types of cash back credit cards

FLAT-RATE CASH BACK CARDS

- Offer the same percentage back on every eligible purchase, regardless of the spending category.
- Usually offer between 1% and 2% cash back on all purchases.
- Are simple to use and require minimal tracking, because every purchase earns the same rate.

TIERED CASH BACK CARDS

- Offer higher cash back rates in bonus categories, such as groceries, gas, or dining, and a lower base rate on all other purchases. (For example, a card might offer 3% on groceries and gas, and 1% on everything else.)
- Can benefit cardholders who consistently spend more in certain categories.

Card Type	Example Rate	Key Features	Best For
Flat-rate cash back	0.5-2% on all purchases	Simple structure; all eligible purchases earn the same rate	Straightforward spending
Tiered cash back	1.5-5% in select purchases	Higher rates in specific cash back categories; base rate elsewhere	Targeted spenders

Use the chart below to see which type of cash back credit card may best match your spending habits and preferences to help choose the right cash back card for you.

If this sounds like you...	Consider this card type	Why it fits
I want the simplest option	Flat-rate cash back	One consistent rate on everything
I don't want to think about categories	Flat-rate cash back	No tracking required
I want consistency without surprises	Flat-rate or tiered cash back	Predictable earning structure as outlined by the bank
I want more cash back where I spend most	Tiered cash back	Extra earnings in key areas
I want the highest earning potential	Tiered cash back	Elevated rates depending on purchases made
I have significant purchases in groceries, gas or dining	Tiered cash back	Higher earn rate on everyday categories

In short:

Cash back credit cards generally fall into two categories: flat-rate and tiered. Both offer different ways to earn cash back based on spending patterns.

Are cash back credit cards worth it?

Cash back credit cards can offer real value, but only if you understand the key rules to consider. The right card can help you earn cash back on everyday purchases, but fees, interest, and program limits can reduce or even outweigh those benefits.

1. DOES THE CASH BACK OUTWEIGH THE ANNUAL FEE?

Some cards with higher cash back rates (especially in bonus categories) charge an annual fee.

Ask yourself:

- How much do I realistically spend in high-reward categories?
- How much cash back would I earn in a year?
- Does that amount exceed the annual fee?

Simple formula:

Estimated yearly cash back – Annual fee = Net value

If the result is low (or negative), the card may not be worth the

2. WILL YOU CARRY A BALANCE?

Cash back is usually modest compared to credit card interest rates.

- If you pay your balance in full each month, cash back can provide net value.
- If you carry a balance, interest charges may outweigh the cash back you earn.

In most cases, cash back cards work best for cardholders who avoid interest by paying in full.

cost.

Here's what to evaluate before choosing a card.

3. DO YOUR PURCHASES QUALIFY?

Not every transaction earns cash back.

Credit card issuers use merchant category codes (MCCs), standardized codes that classify businesses by industry, to determine which purchases qualify for base or bonus categories.

This means:

A purchase only earns base or bonus cash back if the merchant is coded in that category.

Some transactions typically do not earn cash back, including:

- Cash advances
- Balance transfers
- Fees and interest charges
- E-transfers

Understanding how purchases are categorized can help prevent missed earnings.

4. ARE THE PROGRAM LIMITS A CREDIT CARD CLIENT CONCERN?

Before applying, review the fine print for:

- Spending caps on bonus categories if applicable. Some cards may have spending caps while others, like RBC's Cash Back cards, offer unlimited cash back with no spend caps.
- Minimum redemption thresholds (for example, $25 before cashing out).
- Promotional periods or offer expiry dates.

These details can affect how you earn and collect your cash back.

At a glance, cash back credit cards are worth it if:

- You pay in full
- You earn more in cash back than the annual fee
- You understand program limits

How to choose the right cash back credit card

Choosing the right cash back credit card doesn't have to feel overwhelming. By focusing on your personal spending habits and financial goals, you can narrow down your options and select a card that maximizes cash back.

STEP 1: ANALYZE YOUR SPENDING

Start by reviewing two to three months of past purchases. Break your spending into categories such as:

- Groceries
- Dining and takeout
- Gas, EV Charging, ridesharing, and transportation
- Online shopping
- Travel and entertainment

You can use our Cash Back Calculator for an estimate on how much cash back you could earn in a year based on your monthly spending.

Understanding where you spend the most helps you identify which type of cash back card will reward you the most.

STEP 2: MATCH CARD TYPE TO YOUR SPENDING PATTERNS

Spending pattern	Best card type	Why?
Spread across categories	Flat-rate cash back	Earn a regular percentage on eligible purchases with minimal tracking
Heavy spending in a few categories	Tiered cash back	Maximize cash back in bonus categories like grocery, gas or dining

STEP 3: COMPARE COSTS AND CASH BACK

Once you've narrowed your options, evaluate the financial details:

- Total expected cash back: Estimate your annual cash back based on your spending patterns
- Annual fees: Compare the fee to projected cash back to determine net value
- Sign-up bonuses: Consider whether introductory offers align with your short-term spending
- Caps and limits: Review spending caps, bonus category restrictions and minimum redemption thresholds

Browse our full lineup of RBC credit cards to explore our current offers.

Mini Checklist Before Applying:

- ☐ Review past 2-3 months of spending by category
- ☐ Match card type to spending habits
- ☐ Calculate expected annual cash back vs fees
- ☐ Check sign-up bonuses and redemption rules
- ☐ Confirm any category caps, activation requirements, or limits

Following this step-by-step approach makes it easier to select a cash back card that fits your lifestyle, without getting overwhelmed by too many options.

In short:

Choosing the right cash back credit card starts with analyzing your spending habits and matching them to a card structure that maximizes your cash back.

How to maximize cash back and use your card effectively

Understanding how to maximize cash back credit cards starts with building the right habits early. Cash back credit cards can deliver meaningful long-term value, but only when they're managed intentionally. By combining smart setup, disciplined payments and strategic spending, you can increase cash back while avoiding common pitfalls.

1 Set Up and Monitor Your Account Properly

Start strong from day one:

- Activate your card as soon as it arrives
- Enroll in online or mobile banking (such as Royal Bank of Canada Online or Mobile Banking, if applicable)
- Set up alerts for autopay, statements, and payment reminders for due dates and spending thresholds

Ongoing monitoring is just as important. Pay close attention to:

- Accelerated category spending
- Spending caps on bonus categories (if applicable)
- Minimum redemption thresholds (for example, $25 before cashing out)

2 Pay Your Balance in Full and On Time

If you're wondering how to get more cash back on credit cards, the answer isn't just about earning more. It's also about minimizing interest by paying your statement balance in full every month on or before your due date.

Interest charges on carried balances can quickly outweigh the value of your cash back. Paying in full ensures your cash back remains a net gain rather than being offset by charges.

3 Use the Card Strategically

Maximizing cash back comes down to intentional spending.

- Use your card for everyday eligible purchases
- Prioritize spending in bonus categories
- Time larger planned purchases to align with elevated cash back periods
- Stay aware of promotional limits and category caps (if applicable)

4 Redeem Cash Back Regularly

Subject to any limits, redeeming your cash back once it becomes available may allow you to actively benefit from your earnings.

With RBC, you can redeem your rewards as a statement credit. At RBC, cash back credits might be cancelled and purged if the cardholder does not earn any cash back credits in 3 consecutive years.

Quick Best Practices Checklist:

- ☐ Activate your card
- ☐ Track accelerated categories and activation windows
- ☐ Pay your statement balance in full each month
- ☐ Align large purchases with bonus categories
- ☐ Keep your system simple and organized
- ☐ Option to redeem cash back periodically (if your cash back balance hits or exceeds $25)

The Bottom Line:

Learning how to maximize cash back credit cards and how to get more cash back on credit cards doesn't require complex tactics. It comes down to staying organized, paying in full, tracking program rules and spending intentionally. With consistent management and attention to detail, your cash back credit card can become a simple and powerful tool for earning value on everyday purchases.

Conclusion

Used responsibly, a cash back credit card can be a simple and effective way to earn value on everyday spending while supporting your overall financial goals.

FAQs about cash back credit cards

CAN YOU GET CASH BACK ON A CREDIT CARD?

Yes, you can get cash back on a credit card, but it's important to understand the difference between cash back (rewards) and cash back (debit) / cash advance. Cash back (rewards) are earned when you make eligible purchases, giving you a percentage back that can usually be redeemed as a statement credit, direct deposit, gift card or travel. In contrast, debit card cash back at checkout simply allows you to withdraw your own money from your bank account. A cash advance is different as well. It lets you borrow cash from your credit line, often with high fees and interest, and it does not earn cash back. In short, credit card cash back is an incentive for spending, not borrowed funds.

IS CREDIT CARD CASH BACK TAXABLE IN CANADA?

In most cases, cash back is earned from personal spending and is not considered taxable income in Canada. It is generally treated as a rebate or discount on your purchases rather than earned income. However, tax treatment may differ if cash back is earned through business spending or promotional incentives. For specific guidance related to your situation, consider consulting a qualified tax professional.

WHAT ARE THE DOWNSIDERS OF CASH BACK CARDS?

Cash back credit cards can offer solid value, but they come with potential trade-offs. Carrying a balance can lead to interest charges that outweigh your cash back reward value, and some higher-earning cards charge annual fees. Many cards also place spending caps on bonus categories, require activation for rotating offers or set minimum redemption thresholds. If interest or fees exceed the cash back you earn, the overall value of the card can quickly diminish.

WHAT ARE COMMON CASH BACK MISTAKES TO AVOID?

Common cash back mistakes include carrying a balance and paying interest, forgetting to activate bonus categories, overlooking spending caps, opening too many cards just to let cash back sit unused. Cash back cards typically work best for people who pay their balance in full, keep track of program details, and redeem cash back strategically to maximize value.

WHAT'S THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A CASH BACK AND A REWARDS CREDIT CARD?

When comparing a cash back vs rewards credit card, the key difference is how you earn and redeem rewards. A cash back card returns a percentage of eligible purchases as cash, typically offering simple, predictable value that can be redeemed as a statement credit, direct deposit or similar cash equivalent. A rewards credit card earns points or miles instead, which can often be redeemed for travel, gift cards, merchandise or other options, with the value varying based on how you redeem them. Cash back cards generally appeal to those who prefer simplicity and flexibility, while rewards cards may offer greater potential value for frequent travelers or those willing to strategically manage their redemptions.

Low Interest Rate Credit Cards

What is a low interest rate credit card?

A low interest rate credit card comes with an interest rate lower than most other credit cards. So, if you don't pay off your balance in full by the due date, you will be charged less interest compared to a typical credit card. Over time, if you continue to carry a balance, you'll pay significantly less in interest.

The actual interest rate on low interest rate cards vary by credit card issuer.

What is the difference between a fixed rate and a variable rate credit card?

A fixed rate credit card has an interest rate that stays the same, offering you stability and easier budgeting. It will not fluctuate with changes in the market, but issuers can still adjust it with notice.

A variable rate credit card is tied to a benchmark like a prime rate, so your interest rate will fluctuate and may increase over time.

This credit card has a fixed interest rate, which offers predictability and stability. This is a great card for those who value consistency and the ability to budget their expenses.

What are the advantages of a low interest rate credit card?

Save on interest charges: If you choose to carry a balance, you pay less in interest charges and your payments are more affordable.

Consolidate debt: Transferring high-interest balances to a low-interest rate card can help you pay down your balances faster.

Fund an unexpected purchase: Your low interest rate credit card can offer a safety net for unexpected expenses.

Discover where your Avion points can take you

Avion points give you the freedom to travel where and how you want. They open doors to countless experiences, from quick family getaways to international escapes.

- 15,000–35,000 points: Take a short-haul flight within Canada or to nearby U.S. destinations in economy class.
- 45,000–65,000 points: Plan a cross-country trip, a Caribbean vacation, or even flights to select European cities.
- 100,000 points and above: Use your points for long-haul international travel or upgrade to business class to make your dream destination even more special.

Whether it's a quick weekend away or an overseas adventure, Avion points help make those experiences possible.

Earning travel rewards points with an RBC Avion travel credit card

Avion Rewards is RBC's flexible travel rewards program, giving you the ability to earn points on every purchase. While all Avion cards allow you to collect points, some earn at a higher rate on everyday categories such as groceries, dining, or travel. This means you can choose the card that best matches your spending habits and build points more quickly.

You can use your Avion points to book any flight, anytime, on over 500 airlines with no blackout dates or seat restrictions, even during peak seasons. Points can also be redeemed for hotels, vacation packages, car rentals, and other travel expenses through the Avion Rewards portal. You can also convert your Avion points to other frequent flyer programs, use them to pay down your credit card balance, or redeem them for merchandise, gift cards, and more.

And, your points never expire, so you can save up for that dream trip without worrying about losing them. If you want to maximize value, the Air Travel Redemption Schedule offers fixed point pricing for flights all year long, helping you stretch your points further.

Tip

When you first open an RBC Avion credit card, you may be eligible for a welcome bonus, giving your points balance an immediate boost. These offers change over time, but they can quickly help you earn enough for a short-haul flight.

To see the latest offers, you can check RBC's travel credit cards or use the comparison tool to find the card that best fits your travel needs.

How do travel credit cards and rewards points work?

Understanding credit cards with travel benefits is the first step toward turning your daily coffee run into your next vacation. Here's a breakdown.

What are rewards points?

Think of rewards points as a strategic way to get more value out of everyday spending. Every purchase, from gas to groceries and dining out, serves as a small contribution that, over time, can build to a significant reserve. Points can typically be redeemed for flights, hotels, gift cards, or a statement credit, but options may vary by card. Check your specific travel rewards card's terms for details. The value of your points depends on the program and what you choose to spend them on.

Personal > Credit Cards > Product Advice > How Do Travel Credit Cards Work: Points, Perks & How to Choose

how to earn travel rewards points

How quickly you accumulate points depends on what you're buying. Most cards give you one point per dollar spent, as a baseline, but travel cards often award more points when you spend on flights, hotels or car rentals. RBC's Avion Visa Infinite, for instance, adds a 25% bonus on these travel-related categories.

How to redeem travel rewards points

Wondering how to use your credit card points for travel? Once you've saved enough points, you get to decide. Depending on your specific travel rewards card, you may redeem points for flights, hotel stays, or vacation packages through your card's travel portal. However, redemption options and point values can vary between card products. There's also the option to move those points into a partner program, which

2. Review your credit card options

You likely have dozens of credit cards to choose from. And understanding how different types of credit cards work can help you find the one that's right for you.

Keep an eye out for these three types of credit cards to make each dollar work hard for you:

Rewards credit cards

Credit Cards > Product Advice > A Student's Guide to Choosing the Right Credit Card

and with fee rebates if you have a student chequing account. These cards offer rewards through partnerships with loyalty programs, and you redeem your rewards to buy merchandise, acquire gift cards, pay bills and more. For every $1 you spend, you receive an amount in reward points.

The best student rewards cards go a step further, offering bonus rewards or bonus points on categories where students tend to spend the most, such as dining, gaming, subscriptions and transportation. As a result, a student credit card may help you maximize your rewards from each dollar spent.

Cash back credit cards

If you're not interested in earning points, consider a cash back credit card. Typically, cash-back programs are easy to understand and allow you to earn cash back on a percentage of your spending. If you want to keep it simple, or you're not sure when you'd use points rewards, a cashback card is a good first credit card.

actless Payments

payment terminal

Both Visa Paywave and Mastercard Paypass work at contactless terminals, as well as mobile wallets.

Step 2

Hold your card or mobile wallet on the reader for 1-2 seconds

Simply tap and pay with contactless payments for purchases under $250.

Step 3

Wait for approval, and be on your way!

With a "beep" or green light, you're good to go.

Where to Pay

You can tap your card at most retailers, including coffee shops, grocery stores, restaurants and gas stations for any purchase up to $250. If you don't see the contactless symbol when making a purchase, either swipe or insert your chip card into the terminal to pay.

Using Your Smartphone to Pay

When you load your RBC debit or credit cards into the RBC Mobile app, you can pay for purchases up to $250 with your mobile device.

Pilot check

The pilot's block sets compared with the migrated documents of the same pages (Jaccard similarity of the variant sets per page).

Migrated documents	Pages	Identical block set	Average similarity	Note
Live pages imported with the current importer	71	71	100%	Same matcher, so this is the like-for-like check
Approved reference pages	5	5	100%	Variants defined by the prototypes
Live pages imported with the earlier importer	105	69	87%	The differences are the fixes from the unknown review, which these pages haven't had yet

Variants only the pilot found: none. Variants only the migration has: none.

All of them are the article share row ("Share this article" with network links). On those pages it's labelled only as page text, not a block. That's fine to leave as is, or it can get its own share variant.
